National Champion Will Enter Amateur Meet at Broadmoor

One thing about Bud Ward of Spokane, the Washingtonoorn, Washington-bred amateur golf champion of the United States—he's not as chary as some of his predecessors in that proud position have been about tossing his hat in the ring, any ring.

for all hands to take a crack at. Late yesterday afternoon, just after he had completed the successful defense of another of his tittles, that of Pacific Northwest open champion, he announced that he would change his previous plans and compete in the Pacific North-west amateur tournament at Broadmoor next week.

Broadmoor next week.

National amateur golf champions are not in the habit of risk-ing their prestige in match play tournaments of less than national rating. Ward, however, felt that the champion of the Pacific Northwest shoulds be the best golfer in the Pacific Northwest, with no exception of the national champion.

Ward came blazing down the home stretch yesterday to win, his second consecutive sectional open title with a seventy-two-hole card of 271, nine strokes under par for four trips around the par-70 Sand Point course.

Three strokes behind the leader, Charley Congdon, Tacoma pro, at the half-way mark, Bud drew up level at the fifty-four-hole distance with a morning round of 69 and came racing home with a 66 for the formal point section.
